2015-16 HIGHLIGHTS

Books on the Bus.

"Originally, our goal was to improve literacy for K-2 students, but the scope of the project has expanded because every day the bus drivers see students of all ages selecting a book and reading. It's the best type of 'project creep' imaginable," notes Todd Bohm. Adds Dawn Bohm, "We targeted the younger students because although every DCE student now has an iPad, the younger students must leave theirs at school. We saw the bus ride as an opportunity to engage this younger group of students, but students of all ages — including high school students — are picking up a book."

Chick Incubator.

"The commercial incubator purchased with funds provided by the Foundation made our annual chicken growth and development project VERY successful. We had an 80% hatch rate with the new incubation chamber! This year's hatching rate is a marked improvement over our past successes and greatly exceeded our expectations for this year! This project is a highly integrated and multidisciplinary approach to science learning. The Foundation's support of this project is greatly appreciated."

Artist-in-Residence: David Hummer.

"The students would walk in and tell us how much fun they were having or how excited they were to bring their artwork home. At this age, children begin to make assumptions about themselves as artists and a lot of the time they judge their own creation based on what others are making. David encouraged the children to stop comparing their work with others and just find joy in painting. The biggest takeaway for the students is to know they are artists and can remain artists, if they have an earnest desire, continue to learn and work hard at what they love to do."
